

There were two parts that took most of my efforts. The first, and being the largest was the deployment to heroku. First, I had no indication why I was getting HTTP error 500. Then, after trying many different things, I searched and found a logs page on heroku. Fixing the database name formatting in database.php took a while; file path changes, the adding the 'USE' function to all queries. Further, it would call syntax errors on previously working functions. I built this app using XAMPP prior to deployment on Heroku. I have had to alter nearly every file for this work. After getting the vehicle list to finally show up, none of the data from the database was showing.
